

FIRST 'JAP' ATTEMPT TO RECAPTURE LOST BASES IN SOLOMONS ENDS IN DISASTROUS DEFEAT; ENTIRE FORCE KILLED, CAPTURED

New Victory Confirms Belief American Marines Firmly in Control

ARE NOW "MOPPING UP"

Daily Skirmishes Between Marines and Enemy Who Are Hunted Down

By International News Service

The first Japanese attempt to recapture lost bases in the Solomon Islands has ended in a disastrous defeat for the enemy whose entire landing force of 700 men were killed or captured, it was disclosed today in a communique from the Pacific headquarters of Admiral Chester W. Nimitz, not a man escaped.

Following on the heels of the announcement of the successful hit and run raid on Makin, in the Gilbert Islands 1,100 miles northeast of the Solomons, the new victory confirmed the widespread belief that American Marines were firmly in control of several strategically important islands in the Solomon group.

Remnants of the enemy garrisons on the captured islands have been driven into the hills and the dense tropical jungles and are being methodically wiped out, Admiral Nimitz's communique indicated.

It referred to almost daily skirmishes between Marines and detachments of the enemy who are being relentlessly hunted down.

In the Solomons our forces suffered moderate casualties in comparison with the virtual complete destruction of enemy forces engaged.

A force of 700 Japanese was landed on one of the Marine-held Solomon Islands the night of August 20, the communique revealed. A night of confused hand-to-hand fighting followed but with daylight the Marines drove the enemy troops toward the beaches, outflanked them and killed 670 of the naval force. The remaining 30 were captured.

American casualties were 28 men killed and 72 wounded.

On August 19 the Marines attacked and wiped out an entire force of 92 Japanese officers and men while losing only 6 of their own men.

In the Makin Island raid, carried out August 17, installations of this seaplane base were destroyed and 50 of the Japanese garrison slain.

The communique revealed that Maj. James Roosevelt, President Roosevelt's eldest son, was second in command of the landing expedition.

Japanese defenders of Makin apparently were surprised by the American task force for planes coming to their defense from nearby bases bombed their own aircraft during the confusion.

Bucks Co. Soldier Breaks Back in Fall; Improving

DOYLESTOWN, Aug. 22—Word has been received that Darwin Allen, who is in the U. S. Army, has been discharged from a hospital after suffering a fractured back in the line of duty.

Mr. Allen, 24, has been a member of the communication section of the 260th Coast Artillery in Seattle, Wash. About two weeks ago the young man was working on a pole, and in some manner fell to the ground in such a way that his back was fractured.

Taken to a hospital, he was placed in a cast. His recovery was quite rapid, and he has been discharged from the hospital, although he is still compelled to remain in the cast. Friends and relatives had hoped he would obtain a leave to return to his home, but it is not believed he will be able to get the leave.

Prior to being transferred to Seattle, Mr. Allen was stationed at Fort Bliss, Texas.

The young man is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Allen, New Britain, formerly of Doylestown. They have another son, Clifford, who is also in the service. Inducted into the Army last February, Clifford, who is 27 years old, left for Australia last May. He also was employed in a store in Doylestown several years.

GRANGE NAMES TWO DELEGATES AT MEETING

Will Be Representatives At Session of Lower Bucks-Philadelphia Session

PLAY SOFTBALL GAMES

LANGHORNE, Aug. 22—Two delegates were named to represent Middletown Grange at the quarterly meeting of Lower Bucks and Philadelphia Pomona Grange No. 22, which is to be held at Carversville on September 2nd. The delegates are Dr. and Mrs. H. C. Perry and Mrs. Samuel Tomlinson.

Owing to the fact that the meeting of Pomona will take place on the regular meeting night of the local Grange, it was decided by the local group to hold no meeting until Wednesday evening, September 16th. That meeting will be held in the memorial house, and members celebrating birthday anniversaries in September will have charge of the program.

Granges throughout the county will be holding booster meetings, and the local Grange plans to conduct a pet show in connection with its booster meeting on Wednesday evening, September 30th. This will take place at "Springdale Farm," the home of the master, Herman Heston.

John Thompson, of the sports committee, reported that three softball games had been played with the team of the Edgewood Grange the past two weeks, and that the Middletown Grange had won two of the games.

A committee had been appointed to consider the advisability of holding the annual picnic, and during the meeting last evening it announced that because the Grange had held several picnic suppers, it had been deemed best not to hold the annual outing this season.

With the lecturer, Mrs. Bjarni Bjarnason, in charge, members celebrating birthday anniversaries in August presented the program. The program opened with the singing of "Let's Get Acquainted," following which the members celebrating birthday anniversaries in August responded to roll call by telling how to get rid of traveling salesmen. Various suggestions were given, and all agreed that these persons should be treated in a courteous manner.

Mrs. Jacob Hibbs gave three readings, and Mrs. Henry C. Pickering gave a monologue, "Droppin' In."

ON PENNSYLVANIA'S HOME FRONT

By Frank J. Burke

O. P. A. representatives have launched a state-wide check upon compliance with the general maximum price regulations. Agents have already toured York and Lancaster counties and now are at work in Centre, Cameron and Elk. A drastic crackdown on recalcitrant retailers is in prospect immediately after the survey, it was indicated. Initial reports, however, show a high degree of compliance with regulations.

War or no war, more than 1,000,000 automobiles must be kept moving in Pennsylvania to maintain essential civilian travel. That's the estimate of war transportation coordinators on the bases of careful surveys. Experts warn that Philadelphia and other populous centers are fast nearing the saturation point of public transportation facilities.

Any old keys today? Uncle Sam wants them for conversion into weapons that will unlock the door to victory. Civilian defense officials have designated September 21st as the start of "Key Week."

A truck owned by Henry F. Ortlieb, Philadelphia, and driven by Patrick Smith, Magee street, Philadelphia, was en route down the hill, traveling west on the pike. The two crashed, with the Ortlieb truck upsetting.

The crash occurred at 3:50 p. m., and many people were attracted to the scene.

Underwood was removed immediately for treatment by a physician. Damage to the two trucks is estimated at $550. Contents, according to officers, were not damaged to any extent; and both drivers escaped injury.

No arrests were made. The investigating officer was Private Graham.

PACIFIC MAJOR BATTLE

The pattern for the step-by-step, island-by-island reclamation of the South Pacific is being developed in the Solomons. Immediate objective of the United States forces in the present action was to clear strong Japanese garrisons from the Tulagi area and eventually all of the Solomons. They were menacing American shipping to Australia and India, and if their strengthening had continued they could have become a springboard for an invasion of Australia.

Now, by Japanese choosing the affair has developed into a general battle. Carefully laid plans of the American command included such possibility, although it was not considered a probability because of the Japanese navy's persistent shying from battle since Midway.

Mechanized sand fleas are believed to have played an important role in the Solomon engagement which was far more deliberately and ambitiously projected than such hit-and-run raids as American forces conducted earlier in the Gilberts. American aerial reconnaissance is presumed to have been thorough and extensive. It also appears that those in charge of the expedition were prudent enough to amass superior original strength.

Landing on a well-protected island, especially when it is supplied with land-based planes, is a difficult problem. It is bound to be expensive in men and material. Yet with control effected, the gain is positive and conclusive.

This amphibious warfare is begun with a noisy, howitzerlike lobbing barrage from destroyers and cruisers. Then follow plane strating with all machine guns blazing. The troops come ashore in small boats, sometimes rubber rafts, and proceed in Commando style. Fighting is hand to hand and every man for himself. The marines like it, for it requires all their traditional initiative, versatility and bravery.

After the landing parties have engaged the beach patrols, flat landing boats roll in. Light artillery, light tanks and the new American amphibious tractors follow. As the beachheads are extended, heavy equipment is brought ashore. The schedule is completed when the island's airfields are overpowered, and American planes can be landed from aircraft carriers.

The entire world is watching the Solomons action, as it watched the Yanks in France in 1917. So, too, must the ancestors of those boys be watching, and murmuring about forays with the Indians.

DEATH BY TAXATION

The treasurer of the Boeing Aircraft Corporation, which is one of the leading manufacturers of war craft, told the Senate Finance Committee that the tax bill as now drawn would put his company out of business. As he testified, his company was receiving the Army-Navy production efficiency award.

The explanation is that the House produced another tax bill on the "soak-the-rich" principle, tossed it to the Senate, and felt that it had taken the sure way to win votes in the election campaign. A majority of its members wanted to tell their constituents that they had voted to make the rich pay for the war.

According to the schedule laid down by the politics-as-usual crowd in Washington, the Senate is supposed to tinker with the bill for several weeks and then hand it over to a joint committee, which will nurse it along until after the election.

Because of Pennsylvania's leading position in the industrial affairs of the Nation, population shifts are taking place in many sections of the State. Each placement of a new industry and the expansion of others, or the creation of Army and Naval facilities, attracts large groups of labor from various sections of the State and from other states.

Migration of this population can cause many types of problems. Among them are housing, not only an overcrowded condition in their new place of employment but also the creation of vacant dwelling units where they formerly lived. School authorities are faced with the necessity of providing new facilities. Fire hazards and sanitary problems are created, and more police protection is needed. In fact, every public service must be expanded in some manner to take care of the influx of people.

Many requests for information concerning the location of these population migrations in Pennsylvania have been received by the State Planning Board of the Pennsylvania Department of Commerce. In the past the State Planning Board was able to compile useful population estimates of the communities in Pennsylvania using the school census, the number of per capita tax payers, and other information as a base. However, until the Thursday evening at the meeting of the Women's Auxiliary in Grace Episcopal Church parish room. Eight new members were received. A bake sale is planned for Saturday morning, September 5th; and a card party for September 11th. Ice cream and cookies were served.

The latest school census information available is that taken during the summer of 1941. At that time the population shifts were just beginning, and in many instances the worker of the family was the only one who departed because he did not wish to move his family and home until more sure of steady employment. This kept his children at home and a school census there was a concentration of workers at a given point. Until the worker becomes firmly established in his present position and decides to move his place of residence, the school census will not be a good indicator of population changes.

In the case of per capita tax levies which are made in over 90 per cent of our minor civil divisions, it can be readily appreciated the difficulty the tax assessor will have when attempting to levy this tax on the proper individuals in a community which has attracted a large number of persons because of employment. If a person is not a legal resident of the particular community, he cannot be assessed with this tax until he has changed his legal residence. Here again a perfectly good base for the estimating of population is rendered unsatisfactory because of abnormal conditions.

For its own use and to fulfill the requests of others, the State Planning Board is attempting to obtain some picture of the State's present population pattern. If successful, an announcement of these results will be made as soon as available. Of course, every community can observe what is happening in their particular community but it is essential for various reasons to have an overall State picture available. Even the local community by observation cannot determine with any degree of certainty whether or not its population increase

What You Buy With WAR BONDS

The Torpedo Bomber plane has been developed to a high state of perfection and efficiency by our Navy. They have been used most efficiently to scatter and destroy both enemy fighting ships and convoys. They use a bomb something like a sub torpedo.

The Navy Torpedo Bomber costs approximately $188,000. Our plane factories are building them at an amazing rate of construction. We need many of them and must pay for them through the purchase of War Bonds. You and your neighbors can help buy Torpedo Bombers for the Navy if you invest at least ten percent of your income in War Bonds every pay day.

is reasonably permanent because any mushroom growth which occurs may be caused by persons who are merely migrants and who will depart as soon as industrial conditions become normal.

Most local officials of Pennsylvania are well aware of the problems created by these changing conditions. In the case of a depleted population with its resultant tax base decrease, problems will arise as to where the money is coming from to liquidate the indebtedness incurred for new sewers, schools, streets or roads, etc. Where the population is rapidly expanding, thoughts arise as to whether or not indebtedness should be incurred to increase public facilities and, if so, how much should they be expanded.

In any event there is always the fear of the future and the possibility of the community incurring a debt which may be overburdensome after the present emergency has ended. These problems are the result of the war causing abnormal conditions, and during past wars Pennsylvania has proven she could cope with emergencies and there is no indication that she will not do it again.

CHAPTER THIRTY

Was it very hot in the court? Or very cold? Elinor Carlisle could not be quite sure. Sometimes she felt burning as though with fever, and immediately after she shivered.

She had not heard the end of the Prosecuting Counsel's speech. She had gone back to the past—gone slowly through the whole business again, from the day when that miserable letter came to the moment when that smooth-faced police officer had said with horrible fluency: "You are Elinor Katharine Carlisle. I have here a warrant for your arrest upon the charge of murdering Mary Gerrard by administering poison to her on the 27th of July last, and I must warn you that anything you say will be taken down in writing and may be used as evidence at your trial."

Horrible, frightening fluency. . . . She felt caught up in a smooth-running, well-oiled machine—in human, passionless.

And now here she was, standing in the dock in the open glare of publicity, with hundreds of eyes that were neither impersonal nor inhuman, feasting upon her and gloating. . . . Only the jury did not look at her. Embarrassed, they kept their eyes studiously turned away. . . . She thought: "It's because—soon—they know what they're going to say. . . ."

Dr. Lord was giving evidence. Was this Peter Lord—that freckled, cheery young doctor who had been so kind and so friendly at Hunterbury? He was very stiff now. Sternly professional. His answers came monotonously. He had been summoned by telephone to Hunterbury Hall; too late for anything to be done; Mary Gerrard had died a few minutes after his arrival; death consistent, in his opinion, with morphia poisoning in one of its less common forms—the "foudroyante" variety.

Sir Edwin Bulmer rose to cross-examine. "You were the late Mrs. Welman's regular medical attendant?"

"I was."

"During your visits to Hunterbury in June last, you had occasion to see the accused and Mary Gerrard together?"

"Several times."

"What should you say was the manner of the accused to Mary Gerrard?"

"Perfectly pleasant and natural."

Sir Edwin Bulmer said with a slight disdainful smile: "You never saw any signs of this 'jealous hatred' we have heard so much about?"

Peter Lord, his jaw set, said firmly: "No."

Elinor thought: "But he did—he did. . . . He told a lie for me there. . . . He knew. . . ."

Peter Lord was succeeded by the police surgeon. His evidence was longer, more detailed. Death was due to morphia poisoning of the "foudroyante" variety. Would he kindly explain that term? With some enjoyment he did so. Death from morphia poisoning might result in several different ways. The most common was a period of intense excitement followed by drowsiness and narcosis, pupils of eyes contracted. Another not so common form had been named by the French, "foudroyante." In these cases deep sleep supervened in a very short time—about ten minutes; the pupils of the eyes usually dilated. . . .

The court had adjourned and sat again. There had been some hours of expert medical testimony. Dr. Alan Garcia, the distinguished analyst, full of learned terms, spoke with gusto of the stomach contents. Bread, fish paste, tea, presence of morphia. . . . more learned terms and various decimal points. Amount taken by the deceased estimated to be about four grains. Fatal dose could be as low as one grain.

Sir Edwin rose, still bland. "I should like to get it quite clear. You found in the stomach nothing but bread, butter, fish paste, tea and morphia. There were no other food-stuffs?"

"None."

"That is to say, the deceased had eaten nothing but sandwiches and tea for some considerable time?"

"That is so."

"Was there anything to show in what particular vehicle the morphia had been administered?"

"I don't quite understand."

"I will simplify that question. The morphia could have been taken in the fish paste, or in the bread, or in the butter on the bread, or in the tea, or in the milk that had been added to the tea?"

"Certainly."

"There was no special evidence that the morphia was in the fish paste rather than in any of the other mediums?"

"No."

"And, in fact, the morphia might have been taken separately—that is to say, in any vehicle at all? It could have been simply swallowed in its tablet form?"

"That is so, of course."

Sir Edwin sat down.

Sir Samuel re-examined.

"Nevertheless, you are of the opinion that, however the morphia was taken, it was taken at the same time as the other food and drink?"

"Yes."

"Thank you."

Inspector Brill had taken the oath with mechanical fluency. He stood there, soldierly and stolid, reciting off his evidence with practiced ease.

"Summoned to the house. . . . The accused said, 'It must have been fish paste' . . . search of the premises. . . . one jar of fish paste washed out was standing on the draining-board in the pantry, another half full. . . . further search of pantry kitchen. . . ."

"What did you find?"

"In a crack behind the table, between the floorboards, I found a tiny scrap of paper."

"The exhibit went to the jury."

"What did you take it to be?"

"A fragment torn off a printed label—such as are used on glass tubes of morphia."

Counsel for the Defense arose with leisurely ease. He said: "You found this scrap in a crack in the flooring?"

"Yes."

"Part of a label?"

FIRST OF FIVE-GAME SERIES FOR BRISTOL SUBURBAN LEAGUE CROWN GETS UNDER WAY HERE TOMORROW

One of the largest crowds of the season is expected tomorrow to witness the opening of the five-game series to determine the championship of the 1942 Bristol Suburban League. The opposing teams are Edgely, winner of the first half, and Voltz-Texaco, second half champions.

The starting time of the game will be three o'clock, and the diamond is St. Ann's. The second game of the series is scheduled for next Wednesday night on the Edgely diamond. This will be a seven-inning affair, with the starting time being 6:15 p. m.

Edgely won the first half without much trouble, but ran into difficulties in the second half, when it lost four games and won nine. The Voltz team captured the second half crown with a 19 and 2 average, three of its games being called off because of bad weather.

The teams are about as evenly matched as any two teams that went into a playoff series. Both clubs will be missing one of their star players who until recently was a member of the club and is now in the armed service of the country.

Andy Moore, who played shortstop and second base, and was used as a utility player, left with the last group that went into the army; while Stan Dick, who twirled for the Edgelyites, left last month and is in the army.

Each team has a hurler who is among the tops in the circuit. The gaseolers have "Loggie" Braggs, who has won seven games and lost one. Six of these mound victories have been in a row. Edgely has Ralph Linck, whose average for the season is 6 and 1. The Edgely boys also have Turner Ashby who is unbeaten in four games.

Edgely also has Howard Black and Martin Clark for hill duty, while the Voltz boys can use Harold Shackleton, Kemps Boccardo, and Billy Gallagher. Gallagher and Linck are southpaw hurlers, with the red-headed boy winning six and losing four. Black's season record shows five wins and three defeats.

According to the last release of averages, Edgely has four players in the first ten. They are: Folkner, Doster, Hunter, and Johnny Dick. Krames is the only Voltz-Texaco player in the first ten, but he happened to be leading the circuit with a .353 average. But in the Voltz-Texaco lineup will be Danny Mazzillo, Jimmy Cooper, Schumacher and Berry, all of whom are capable of breaking up a ball game at any time.

Umpires Walt Miller, Leo Burke and Joseph Kervick are requested to be present at the game tomorrow. Two umpires will work each ball game, with the trio alternating in each game.

the seminar leaders for the morning session.

There were three groups: Secondary School Education, led by Mr. Paul Gruber; primary grades, by Miss Bowen; and Psychological Aspects of Public Instruction by Dr. Fetter. The three leaders are members of Bucks Co. School Superintendent Charles Boehm's staff. The groups met at different cottages in the summer colony. At noon they were called together at Mrs. Dotterer's cottage, where basket lunches, supplemented by delicious refreshments served by the hostess, were enjoyed. The afternoon session was opened with short talks on the findings of the Seminar by the three leaders, followed by a discussion of education in Bucks County by Superintendent Boehm.

The speaker of the afternoon was Isaac Miles Wright, professor of Education at Muhlenberg College, and member of the school board of Allentown. Dr. Wright gave a challenging description of those qualities which go to make up not only the successful teacher but also the successful person in any walk of life.

Mrs. Dotterer was assisted in entertaining the institute by Mrs. Charles H. Orr, Mrs. Henry Detweiler and Mrs. John Detweiler, Quakertown; and Mrs. J. Marvin Shick and Miss Elizabeth Shick, Riegelsville.

wardens that he had a right to be on the street as he was an electrician. He is also reported to have asked the wardens if they were ever in an air raid. He said that he was in one in the first World War. There was an extended argument between Kitcherman and the wardens, according to the testimony. He was reported to have also flashed a flashlight onto a workman's badge he had, so as to identify himself.

When called to the stand Kitcherman that he was on his way down to see "Mr. Kelly" about becoming an air raid warden himself. "Don't you think that you left it kind of late?" asked Judge Laughlin.

The witnesses were Mrs. George Earle and Ethel Bowen.

Allen Wilson, son of the late Mayor Wilson of Philadelphia, was fined $10 and costs of $5 for having a light on in his house. It appears that Wilson is away and someone went into the house and left a light on. His mother assumed responsibility for the fine and costs.

George Hunter, Norman Dransfield, and Conway Keene were the witnesses against George Shaw.

When this case was called Shaw did not appear but his wife appeared for him. Questioned as to why her husband did not appear Mrs. Shaw said that he was working. "He just couldn't make it," she said. She was told that she could not appear for her husband and that he was violating the warrant by not appearing.

"I never considered that I was violating anything by coming in his place," pleaded Mrs. Shaw.

"He is certainly a nice husband," said Judge Laughlin. You can tell him that I said so, too," said Laughlin, intimating that Shaw had paid no attention to the warrant so far as he was concerned but had sent his wife in his place.

Mrs. Shaw said that her husband was employed at Bendix and would be home at about eight o'clock. The case was adjourned for a few minutes and then Constable Riley went outside and brought Shaw into the court.

Shaw told Judge Laughlin that he had to work. "Is your work more important than answering the warrant?" inquired the Judge.

Shaw went on to explain that the Bendix plant is making compasses which were necessary to win the war. He said that only he and two others could do the work and that he could not miss his employment. He emphasized that his position was an important one.

The witnesses said that they had knocked on the front and back doors of the Shaw residence when they found a light burning. They got no response.

Shaw's defense was that he was at work. His wife was out and when their small son came home he turned the light on, and then went to sleep in the breakfast nook.

Then finally Shaw said that he forgot all about the warrant.

"Well to help you remember I'll fine you $25 and costs of $5," said Judge Laughlin. Shaw said that he would pay this morning.
